The Positives of Being Certified

What most people are not aware of is that being certified is not just beneficial because it is required by your state but being certified will also help you keep your customers, you and your family healthy.

The lessons learned in a certification class for food handler or food managers is irreplaceable. Did you know that the majority of food borne illnesses can be avoided by following some simple rules and guidelines.

Having a properly educated and skilled staff is important in any field but even more so in the culinary industry. Peoples health and lives are at stake. Consider this, the small investment a restaurant owner will make to ensure his staff is properly educated and certified is nothing compared to bad publicity that may come from customers becoming sick because of improper cooking methods, improper storage methods, and improper handling methods of food.

Statistics show that a whopping 15 percent of the American population come down with some type of food borne illness a year. The majority of these people get them from a food establishment. We can tell you one thing, most people who contract a food borne illness from an establishment will never come back and that's not good for business.

Ken Kuscher's 35 year of experience has given him a step up against the competition. In those years Ken has been involved in numerous projects as well as institutions. Ken kuscher has been involved in the following:

- Director of operations for the National Restaurant Association – 5 years.
- Owner operator Koki Foods Group in Metro D.C. Operated the Food Service at the Department of Health and human Service and U.S. Army material command – Over 20 years
- Appointed U.S. Army Evaluator for the Philip A. Connelly Award Program in 2008 and 2013.

Besides being helpful in keeping you, your staff and most importantly your customers healthy a food handlers certificate is required by Florida law for all employees that are in the food industry.

According to Florida law:

- All food service employees must receive training on hygiene and food borne disease prevention, in addition to training on their assigned duties
- The establishment has to train employees within 60 days of hiring
- Each employee must receive a training certificate from a Florida approved training program every 3 years
